Performance So Long Credited to the Detroit Star Will Not Hold Comparison with the Baltimore Player.

The Herald hates to dispel the idea of the popular idol, "Ty obb, the great. The claim that he was the man to put the record or making consecutive hits on the books has been common gossip. n 1911, when Cobb made a hit or more in forty consecutive games, was claimed to be the first and only time it had ever been done a major league baseball. During that session of games Cobb made eventy-six hits, twelve of them being doubles, eight triples and one ome run, giving him an average of .466.
